About the Institute

The Hunt Institute for Botanical Documentation, a research division of Carnegie Mellon University, specializes in the history of botany and all aspects of plant science and serves the international scientific community through research and documentation. To this end, the Institute acquires and maintains authoritative collections of books, plant images, manuscripts, portraits and data files, and provides publications and other modes of information service. The Institute meets the reference needs of botanists, biologists, historians, conservationists, librarians, bibliographers and the public at large, especially those concerned with any aspect of the North American flora.

Hunt Institute was dedicated in 1961 as the Rachel McMasters Miller Hunt Botanical Library, an international center for bibliographical research and service in the interests of botany and horticulture, as well as a center for the study of all aspects of the history of the plant sciences. By 1971 the Library's activities had so diversified that the name was changed to Hunt Institute for Botanical Documentation. Growth in collections and research projects led to the establishment of four programmatic departments: Archives, Art, Bibliography and the Library.

S.W.

I am directed by the Council of the Horticultural Society to forward to your Excellency copies of the Programme for the Society's Exhibitions in the present year, in the hope that your Excellency will cause them to be distributed to the Horticultural Societies and lovers of Horticulture generally in the country in which your Excellency's duties place you.

The object the Council of the Society has in view is to cause Fruit or Flowers to be from time to time exhibited in England by natives of all Countries, so that each Country may ultimately benefit by the rivalry after seeing in what other Countries excel.

I have the honour to be

Your Excellency's most Obedt. Servt.

His Excellency
the British Ambassador
at the Court of Austria

John Lindley
Secretary

He, He, He.
