About the Institute

The Hunt Institute for Botanical Documentation, a research division of Carnegie Mellon University, specializes in the history of botany and all aspects of plant science and serves the international scientific community through research and documentation. To this end, the Institute acquires and maintains authoritative collections of books, plant images, manuscripts, portraits and data files, and provides publications and other modes of information service. The Institute meets the reference needs of botanists, biologists, historians, conservationists, librarians, bibliographers and the public at large, especially those concerned with any aspect of the North American flora.

Hunt Institute was dedicated in 1961 as the Rachel McMasters Miller Hunt Botanical Library, an international center for bibliographical research and service in the interests of botany and horticulture, as well as a center for the study of all aspects of the history of the plant sciences. By 1971 the Library's activities had so diversified that the name was changed to Hunt Institute for Botanical Documentation. Growth in collections and research projects led to the establishment of four programmatic departments: Archives, Art, Bibliography and the Library.

Dear Sir

I intended sending you a number of bills to be stitched up with your first number, but find that it would cost more than I should wish to pay out. I have therefore only sent a copy of the title page & prospectus, which I should be glad if you would display on pages in your advertising sheet.

I intend sending copies of Part I to all the Provincial news papers, & to continue sending the other Parts, ^{to them} as they come out, on condition that they advertise the work once every year, till completed.

With best wishes for the success of your Magazine I remain Dear Sir sincerely yours
J. D. Hooker

P.S. If it be not asked too much, I should be very much obliged if you would have the kindness ^{to send} the enclosed notices to the different periodicals in Edinburgh
