About the Institute

The Hunt Institute for Botanical Documentation, a research division of Carnegie Mellon University, specializes in the history of botany and all aspects of plant science and serves the international scientific community through research and documentation. To this end, the Institute acquires and maintains authoritative collections of books, plant images, manuscripts, portraits and data files, and provides publications and other modes of information service. The Institute meets the reference needs of botanists, biologists, historians, conservationists, librarians, bibliographers and the public at large, especially those concerned with any aspect of the North American flora.

Hunt Institute was dedicated in 1961 as the Rachel McMasters Miller Hunt Botanical Library, an international center for bibliographical research and service in the interests of botany and horticulture, as well as a center for the study of all aspects of the history of the plant sciences. By 1971 the Library's activities had so diversified that the name was changed to Hunt Institute for Botanical Documentation. Growth in collections and research projects led to the establishment of four programmatic departments: Archives, Art, Bibliography and the Library.

Dear Sir David

Thank you for the information with regard to Col. Cunningham's book & for your kind letter.

I am very sorry to hear of care and anxieties that you and Lady Braine have been going through wish that we could be of any service in helping to find a home where the invalid could be taken care of in just the way that you would wish.

My brother-in-law, Dr. Phares, is staying with us; he has access to information with regard to many nursing homes. I have intended to tell him of your difficulty in finding one to your mind, & he is making inquiries & I hope you will not think me very interfering, but it would be a privilege to know that our well-timed help in need could also be of service to you.

With kindest regards to you both

Yours sincerely
G. H. H. H.
